

ALL THE WATER IS PUT TO SOME USE

Streams in Ditches Quench Thirst of Animals and Vegetation.

TRACING THE RIVULETS

THEY RUN TO PLACES WHERE THEY DO GOOD.

What becomes of the water that runs through Salt Lake's streets?

The average man doesn't give the matter a thought as a rule save when a water famine like the present comes. Then he is apt to fall in with the view, frequently given a certain amount of publicity in print, that it is wasted. Otherwise he looks at it as it runs, and hardly realizes that it is there. It gives him a pleasant impression, even if he be an old citizen and used to it. If he be a stranger he'll probably say nice things about the city.

But the water is used—every bit of it. It is used just as the old pioneers who mapped out this plan of street irrigation decided it should be. It quenches the thirst of long rows of Lombardy poplars and soaks into dry ground where grass starts green during the whole hot summer. If one has plenty of time to follow it, he will find the trip worth while.

It comes roaring from the city canal, which has its origin at the Jordan, into the tunnel on North Temple street, and shows down the dark hole until it reaches the gate near the northeast corner of the temple grounds. A person can follow any one of the clear streams down Main, State or West Temple streets.

Comforts Dumb Animals.

In the shade of the locusts and poplars near the high adobe wall of the temple children sit by the stream, occasionally dipping bare feet into its limpid depths. Hot summer mornings, though the sun is just rising above the mountains to the eastward, sparrows come to the gutterade in flocks. They hop down the sloping bank, dip their little beaks into the stream and throw back their heads; then bathe, after the fashion of birds, shaking their feathers into round puffy balls. Time and again they repeat the process; then fly aloft and begin again the day's chattering from telegraph wires and eaves of business blocks.

You will find this right through the paved district; and as the day grows on, you will see other things—horses cooling their weary legs in the flowing streams, occasionally bending their heads to drink. To them it is a boon indeed. And at times comes a big St. Bernard or Newfoundland dog, panting, tired out with the heat. He throws himself into the gutter and rolls ecstatically in the liquid coolness, looking dumb happiness and gratitude for the relief. Such things you can see any hot afternoon. Dogs and weary dray horses see use in these streams of water.

Waters the Shade Trees.

Farther down—for you are following one of the streams now from the business district to where shade trees and wide lawns line the streets—the brooklet grows smaller. A person can trace the cause at every corner, where a ditch runs away down a side street.

And as you go still farther, other streams come in—streams which had originally departed and are led back—that is to say what is left of them is brought back. The rest has gone to the roots of the shade trees and wetted the ground along the edges of parking strips.

In the morning and evening you will find occasional furrows that are cut away from the ditch side bearing water along the tree rows. Full at its beginning, one of these furrows finally bears only a muddy half inch of water, which is soon sucked in by the earth.

And so it goes all the way down the ditch, emptying itself and getting new tribute, each time scantier, it finally empties what is left of its contents into the big canal at Ninth South street. And in this turn carries its burden out to gardens and fields where the water is turned through small ditches and furrows just as was the case in the main part of town.

MONKEY IS A STAR ACTOR

Wonderful Animal Is Among the Simians With Seibel Brothers' Dog and Pony Show.

With Seibel Brothers dog and pony show, which begins a two days' engagement in Salt Lake, Thursday, Sept. 7, are a number of extraordinary monkey actors.

The star of the lot appears to be a sort of Berry Wall of the "40's." His name is McAllister, and he is very proud of it. He dresses like a man, acts like a man and eats like a man. His table etiquette is said to be superior to that of some men. He never does the "sword swallowing act," which, in circus parlance, means using a knife instead of a fork to carry the food to the mouth. His clothes are of the latest cut and he dresses in the height of fashion, and always enters the area carrying a cane. He wears a silk hat and patent leather shoes, and has a valet to wait on him from the time the performance commences until it is over.

It takes half an hour to get McAllister ready for his appearance before an audience, for he is said to be very fastidious about his personal appearance. In fact, the most remarkable thing about him is his vanity. His hair must be parted just right and his trousers have the proper creases, otherwise he will insist upon delaying his appearance until his wardrobe is satisfactory. He wants to be the whole thing while he is before the audience.

McAllister does an eating act which is the hit of the show. He has his meals served hot, eats with a fork, uses a napkin, pays his check and never forgets to tip the waiter. All tribute, each time scantier, it finally empties what is left of its contents into the big canal at Ninth South street. And in this turn carries its burden out to gardens and fields where the water is turned through small ditches and furrows just as was the case in the main part of town.

Seibel Brothers have many remarkable actors, including dogs, ponies, and monkeys, but Mc is the bright particular star of the outfit, and it is claimed he is the most valuable four-footed performer in the show business.

The Hot Wave

Is over, and we are not dead yet, but still in the painting and wall paper business. And it's time for you to get busy in that line.

Advance Showing of "Moneybak" Black Silks - "MONEYBAK" - SILKS

The long-wearing Black Silk will not cut or split, will not fade or crack. "MONEYBAK" tafetta, being different from others in that its every thread is of the finest of silk, and of the most solid quality, the greatest of care being exercised, not only in the raw product, but in every successive stage of spinning, dyeing, weaving and finishing, no adulteration of any character being practiced. No fear then that after being made up with expensive trimmings the new gown may turn sullen and dingy under a few weeks wear. "The name 'MONEYBAK,' tells part of the story, being sold with a guarantee. Each dealer selling 'MONEYBAK' silks is authorized to refund the purchase price should 'MONEYBAK' fade, cut, or prove in any way defective under reasonable wear. "Moneybak" Black Silk is sold by one merchant in each city, and the genuine always has the name 'MONEYBAK' woven on the selvage. F. Auerbach & Bro. being the sole agents in Salt Lake City.
